

APMIS SUPPORTS SCIENCE

Dear APMIS Member Society,

We are grateful to our supporting scientific societies and all the scientists who already submit their articles and share their work every year in APMIS.

But we still need your help to ensure that research continues to be free and accessible – and not locked behind corporate paywalls influenced by commercial interests.

All you need to do is publish your research in APMIS.

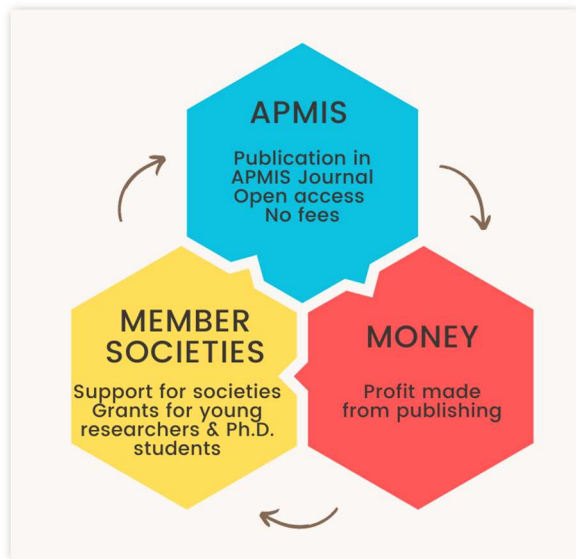

This will keep our 100 years non-profit journal thriving in scientific publishing with no commercial interests.

Your publications will also help support younger researchers to pursue their research ambitions.

WHAT IS APMIS?

Journal of Pathology, Microbiology and Immunology – the APMIS Journal is an international multidisciplinary journal with a strong aim of bridging pathology, microbiology, and immunology to advance the knowledge of these crossing disciplines and exploring their interaction.

Here is how!

APMIS wishes to support science by directing economic funds to the younger researchers, based upon our annual revenue. Our revenue is depending on the number of papers being published; the more published papers - the more we are able to pay back to young researchers.

Our member societies are of special value to APMIS, and starting from 2024, APMIS will introduce research grants for young researchers who are members of the APMIS member societies. To help us do this we encourage the Societies to brand APMIS and inspire their members to publish with APMIS.

The research grants are aiming to support younger researchers and Ph.D. students to explore their exciting ideas in the fields of pathology, microbiology and immunology.

Please consider this great opportunity for your society members! More information will follow with deadlines for application and other details.

Kind regards,

Thomas Bjarnsholt, Louise Kruse Jensen and Peter Østrup Jensen
